Excerpt: . . . NOTES. Note 1, page 16. There are many writers and newspapers who have expressed the highest credit to The Hague Tribunal, to the Czar of Russia and to the Diplomats of the United States, who have done already for the establishment of that Tribunal in favor of the general peace of nations, just as if the whole matter were already settled. Such is the expression of the New York Times, December 27, 1902: While to the Czar of Russia must be given the credit of having proposed The Hague Tribunal, it owes its growth in influence chiefly to the United States. American diplomats have seized every opportunity since its organization in 1900 to make it a real force in international relations. In reality, however, The Hague Tribunal has no power at all to give out any judgment between nations nor to enforce it against...
