Excerpt: .the King replied that he would not strengthen those who were his enemies by paying money to them. Hotspur retorted warmly that the King owed it to those who had risked their lives upon his account, to come to their aid when in peril. The King rejoined angrily, You are a traitor; you would succour the enemies of myself and my kingdom. I am no traitor, said Percy, but faithful and speak in good faith. The King then drew his sword; whereupon Hotspur, exclaiming, Not here, but on the field of battle, left the royal presence, as it happened, for ever. This famous interview is practically endorsed by the rhymer Hardyng, Hotspur s personal attendant: Sir Henry sawe no grace for Mortimer, His wife s brother; he went away unkende To Berwyk so, and after came no nere, Afore thei met at Shrewesbury in...
