Excerpt: . . . the family tree, and not unfrequently the butt of social criticism. The blood, as I had occasion to say in a former paper, read before this Association some two years ago--is the pabulum of life, and the teeth are, in a large measure, responsible for its condition, for they may be said to be the prime factors in its production. It from disease, decay or loss of these organs, the primary stages of digestion are impaired, the surrounding tissues become involved in the ruin, and add their diseased exudation to the already half masticated food, and are carried in this condition to the great furnace of the system to be converted into what healthy pabulum may, but the rather impregnating the vital fluid with a virulent poison, which sooner or later renders life almost intolerable, and not unfrequently is it the case that disease is so...
