February 12, 1943 After his great series of debates with Douglas and subsequent defeat at the polls in January, 1859, Lincoln returned to the quieter stream of politics and his law practice, no doubt expecting to campaign for the Senate again six years later. That fall he accepted with considerable excitement an invitation to give a popular lecture on February 27th in Henry Ward Beecher s famous Plymouth Church, with the understanding that it might be a political lecture. Here was an opportunity to renew the debate with Douglas and to prove himself before the powerful east (and perhaps Lincoln knew or suspected that there was anti-Seward sentiment behind the invitation). Senator Douglas had recently contended that according to the founding fathers, the federal government had no right to control slavery in the federal territories. Holding the opposite position, Lincoln set out to document it with a thorough study of the opinions of the founding fathers as preserved in the records of the Constitutional Convention and he labored more carefully than he had in creating any previous oration. The result was the most learned, close-knit argument of his career. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
