Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Entomologist's Monthly Magazine, Vol. 15 For the next four days we were practically imprisoned in the Hotel Fletschorn, as it rained continuously. On July 20th the weather mended, and we started for Berisal. On the road, about two miles from the village of Simplon, a locality already known for E. christi, Mr. Lemann took two specimens, but I only noticed E. epiphron, var. cassiope. On the summit of the Pass there were a few butterflies, notably Colias phicomone and Melitaea aurinia, var. merope. Whilst at Berisal the weather was not fine, and the nights intensely cold for the time of year. In the meadows at the back of the 2nd Refuge, the well known locality for Lycaena zephyrus, var. lycidas, I took a fair number of s, also one or two s, but these latter were very worn. The walk down to Brigue will be remembered chiefly by the countless numbers of L. corydon, they were simply in thousands resting on the muddy roadsides, rising in clouds as they were disturbed by passing...
